

When the survey party reached the delta the water had already fallen and the channel was a chain of pools between banks of grey silt, each one lower than the last.